

YOUTH IN ACTION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 21, 1997, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. METCALF) is recognized during morning hour debates for 5 minutes.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. Speaker, over the recess I had opportunity to visit Youth in Action in Mount Vernon, Washington, which is a city in my district. Youth in Action was created in Washington State to encourage school age children living in multifamily housing to participate in afterschool programs.

While most parents would like to spend more time with their children, many parents are unable to do so because of their demanding jobs. The Youth in Action program provides adult supervision and engages children in activities while parents are at work.

More importantly, these adults serve as positive role models to children whose parents are not able to be present. Our children are not the sole beneficiaries. Our communities also benefit with lower crime rates, decreased vandalism, and reduction in property damage. Programs such as Youth in Action help encourage children to excel and be active in positive situations at an early age.

Mr. Speaker, it is during these formative years that we can have the most influence on these children by instilling values and building positive character traits.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend Youth in Action for providing this essential service to children of our community, children who may need inspiration.

E-RATE IS TAX ON AMERICANS' PHONE BILLS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 21, 1997, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SCARBOROUGH) is recognized during morning hour debates for 5 minutes.

Mr. SCARBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, earlier this hour a friend of mine came to the floor and was talking about his support for the E-Rate system, the E-Rate tax. He was also talking about confusion surrounding that program.

While I certainly respect the gentleman's opinions and understand his viewpoints, I have got to tell my colleagues there should not be a whole lot of confusion surrounding the E-Rate tax, or the Gore tax as it is more commonly called. If there is, it is because there was a backroom deal between Vice President GORE and a bureaucrat for the FCC.

Mr. Speaker, there should not be confusion, but there may be because of the tax increase on the phone bill of all Americans which was passed on to them secretly by the Vice President and bureaucrats and not by elected officials in this Chamber.

It certainly violates all notions of fair play and constitutional limits that are passed on the Federal Government. There may be confusion because the FCC used heavy-handed tactics to try and stop phone companies from telling their consumers that a 5 percent tax had been passed on to every one of their phone bills secretly. Certainly, that does add confusion.

Now, what the Gore tax does is through the telecommunications bill it misinterprets, or interprets very loosely, a provision that they believe allows the FCC to demand that telecommunications companies increase taxes on phone bills by 5 percent and then passes that money on to a new Federal bureaucracy program.

We have heard, and we will hear throughout this debate, that this tax is about the children. That it is about helping the children. And since I have been in Washington, D.C., I have found that there is not much that we pass on this floor that somebody does not say is about helping the children. Children, children, children. That is all we hear about.

Well, I say if this tax increase on every American's phone bill is so important for the children, then why do we not invite the Vice President and our tax-and-spend friends on the left to come down to this Chamber and debate, fairly and openly for all Americans to see, the issues involved here?

America is not about passing tax increases on to all Americans through a bureaucracy, or for an administration official to decide that, gee, this is a really good program, let us tax all Americans and not tell them about it.

What America is supposed to be about, what this Chamber, the People's House, is supposed to be about, the epicenter of freedom and democracy across the world, it is supposed to be about a fair and free, open debate.

Over 200 years ago, Thomas Jefferson was talking about the promise and the dream of America and what would make the American Republic. What Thomas Jefferson talked about was the fair marketplace of ideas and the free marketplace of ideas where Americans from all sides of an issue could come together and debate the issues that affected Americans.

Mr. Speaker, regrettably, this tax increase on the phone bill of all Americans has not been done openly in this Chamber, but rather has been done in the backrooms of the White House and in bureaucracies across Washington, D.C. When the telephone companies went to the bureaucrats and said we are going to start telling our consumers about this 5 percent tax that has been passed on to them, they met resistance. The bureaucrats said, "You cannot do that." And so now they are debating that issue back and forth.

Because of this reason, because of the backroom deals, today I have introduced a bill called the "E-Rate Tax Moratorium Act of 1998." It is going to do a few simple things. The first thing it is going to do is it is going to stop the bureaucrats at the FCC from demanding that phone companies tax Americans.

The second thing it is going to do is it is going to stop the FCC from demanding that the telecommunications companies participate in the future in paying more money into this new bureaucracy. It does not destroy this bureaucracy that supposedly is supposed to help children. It does not stop the head of this new bureaucracy from talking $200,000 a year, not that that is something that we would not necessarily like to do away with.

But, instead, it puts a moratorium on it, and it says wait a second, you all passed this in a manner that the GAO said was illegal. You broke laws. You hiked taxes on every single American with a telephone without doing it in a fair and open democratic debate. Let us just put a freeze on it and take up the issue later.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join in a moratorium on the Gore tax.

RECESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RADANOVICH). Pursuant to clause 12 of rule I, the Chair declares the House in recess until 2 p.m.

Accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 16 minutes p.m.), the House stood in recess until 2 p.m.

□ 1400

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. EWING) at 2 p.m.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Reverend James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Surround us, O God, with the spirit of unity as we cherish together our purposes and our aspirations. We know, gracious God, that you unite us in our common creation and give us solidarity in our shared aspirations. You have also given us individual minds with which to think, hearts with which to care, and hands with which to work. We honor the authentic disagreements we have with each other even as we honor each other in our shared objectives and purposes. Help us to hold high, O God, our noble tasks to your glory and honor. In your name, we pray. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.
